Culture of Potatoes under Straw.

I embrace this opportunity to make a few remarks about the culture of potatoes, suggested by two articles in your December number. Your correspondent R. M., of lower Egypt, says of the potatoes: "This is no country for potatoes, there has been but one good crop here in six or seven years," etc. The farmers hereabouts used to say the same thing, as long as they followed the old years the potato growers have, generally, followed a new method to their entire satisfaction. I will describe it:

The ground is deeply plowed, it is best to plow it before winter; manure it during winter, and plow it again in spring, and harrow. Then lay the potatoes on top of the soil, and press them in a little with your foot; then cover the whole patch with straw, 8 to 10 inches deep, and the work is done until you dig them out in the fall.

The advantage of this covering with straw is, 1st, Your soil keeps moist To which we invite the special attention of during summer; 2nd, It will keep mellow the whole season; 3d, The weeds are prevented from coming up; and 4th, The digging of the potatoes much easier, because in fall you find them partly lying just on the top, and the balance but one or two inches deep.

An experience of five years has shown that, by this method, the crop of potatoes not only increases in size and quantity, but improves also in quality. Being a native of Germany (which country is celebrated for excellent -potatoes) I heretofore could not be satisfied with the quality of potatoes raised here; but now I am entirely satisfied, and find them as good and mealy as in my old country.

I generally plant them 18 inches apart both ways, and make a crop of about 50 bushels on one-fourth of an acre, and that without plowing before winter or manuring. A neighbor of mine who did so and planted several acres, got from 250 to 300 bushels per acre. During the time this method has been followed here, no crop of potatoes has been known to fail either in quantity or quality.

Hominy.

In point of economy as human food. one bushel of beans or hominy is equal to ten of potatoes. Hominy, too, is a dish almost as universally liked as potatoes, and at the South about as freely eaten, while at the North it is seldom seen. In fact it is an unknown food except to a few persons in the cities. By hominy we do not mean a sort of coarse meal, but grains of white corn, from which the hull and chit, or eye, has been removed by moistening and pounding in a wooden mortar, leaving the grains almost whole, and composed of little else but starch. It has often been said that not one cook in a dozen 250,000 SEGARS! knows how to boil a potatoe. We may add another cypher when speaking of the very simple process of cooking hominy. We give the formula from our We have also on hand a fine assertment of own experience and instruction received in a land where hog and hominy are well understood. Wash slightly in cold water and soak twelve hours in tepid soft water; then boil slowly from three to six hours in the same water, with plenty more added from time, with great care to prevent burning. Do not salt while cooking, as that or hard water will harden the corn. So it will peas or beans, green or dry, and rice also. When done, add butter and salt, or a better way is to let each season to suit the taste. It may be eaten with meat in lieu of vegetables, or with sugar or syrup. Is is good hot or cold, and the more frequently it is warmed over, like the old pot of

"Bean-porridge best at nine day's old."

So is hominy-it is always good, and very wholesome, and like tomatoes only requires to be eaten once or twice to fix the taste in its favor .- Journal of Cabbage Plants.

A farmer near Chicago adopts a nov-el mode of raising early cabbage plants. He takes an old hog trough in the Fall and fills it with soil, and puts it on top of a fence, or any place five or six feet from the ground. Here in remains all Winter. The frost mellows the soil, and in the Spring it will be fit to work much earlier than the soil in the garden. He sows the seed in the trough, and has ell the plants he wants and some for the neighbors, and earlier than they can be raised in any other way. A frost which our STOCK IS COMPLETE, will kill tender plants on the surface of the ground, does not trouble those on the fence in the hog trough.

The march of progress is exhibited in the fact that Naples has just been lit with gas. The gasometer was solemnly inaugurated by the crown prince, and the street lamps will be blessed. Jerusalem is to be supplied with water at a cost, according to an estimate of a civil engineer, of about eight thousand pounds. The population numbers a little over 20,000.
